THE BROOKLYN MYSTERY.

LUCETTA MYERS IN CUSTODY.

HER REPLIES TO THE DISTRICT-ATTORNEY'S QUES TIONS-THE POLICE SEARCHING FOR ANOTHER WOMAN.

The woman arrested by the Brooklyn detectives at No. 22 Orchard-st. on Thursday night is still in clese custody. Her name is Lucetta Myers, or Lucetta Armstrong, and her place of residence is No. 46 Riving ton-et., New-York. She occupied a rear room on the top floor of a wretched-tenement-house.

District-Attorney Britton has held several protracted interviews with the woman in custody, and after one of them, yesterday, is reported to have stated that if she did not murder Mr. Goodrich herself, she knew all about it. When asked how he arrived at this conclusion, he said that he had done so from what she had said and what she refused to say. She admitted, for instance, that Mr. Goodrich paid her house rent, and then she hed directly as to the time of her last visit to Brooklyn and her movements since. In one instance, he stated, she tried to parry his questions by making a statement wholly at variance with the truth. He produced a letter and said to her: "Did you write that ?" For a moment she remained silent, but recovering herself, said sharply "Yes, I wrote it; where did you get it?" She wanted him to give it to her, but he did not comply with her request. Her name was signed to the letter, and it showed that the story she had been telling was entirely faise.

The District-Attorney also stated that this woman will be held notwithstanding all that the Coroner's jury may say, and that she impressed him as being an exceedingly canning woman, and one who has had a very wide ex-She was removed to Raymond-st. Jail last evening, and the detectives are now searching for an-other woman who, it is said, has taken a prominent part in the tracedy.

The story of Lucetta Armstrong, as told by her wretched parents, is a very sad one, and there are many who think that the woman is guiltless of the terrible charge of complicity in the assassination of Charles Goodrich, and that the detectives are following a false eccut. At the inquest, yesterday, nothing new was

THE PRISONER'S STORY.

EXTERME POVERTY OF HER PARENTS-HOW THE NEWS OF HER ARREST WAS RECEIVED AT HER HOME-THE EXTENT OF HER ACQUAINTANCE WITH GOODEICH.

Lucetta J. Myers, age 26, the daughter of Ephraim and Jane Hubbell, was born in the village of New-Milford, Conn. From New-Milford her parents moved to Bridgeport, where a sister was born, Sarah Hubbell, now aged 22 years. In 1852 the family came to New-York. Here the family have since lived, with the exception of an interval of several months, when they were driven from the city by the prevalence of cholera. Mr. Hubbell was supporting his family at the time by keeping a large boarding-house. Though compelled to abandon this business at a great pecuniary sacrifice, Mr. Hubbeil lost the greater part of his means, and has never recovered from the misfortune. On returning to the city he obtained employment as a possmen laborer in a brick-yard, and for many years afterward with great difficulty earned sufficient money

His daughters were taken from school at 10 years of age and were kept at home to help their mother in sew-ing clothing for tailor shops, and thus partly earned their own livelihood. The daughters had scarcely reached womanhood, when both were married. Lucetta at 17 years of age was married to John Armstrong, who was susplayed as a detective by a private detective firm. They had one child, William G. Armstrong, now aged 5 years. Husband and wife lived happily together until 1871, when Armstrong was killed by the accident at New-Hamburg, on the Hudson River Railway. Six months after Armstrong's death, Lucetta married Samuel Myers, commercial agent. Six months again passed, and Myers died of quick consumption. Soon after this misfortune, Lucetta obtained work in a shirt-making factory, and has since estensibly carned food for herself Meanwhile another stroke of misfortune had com upon the family. The husband of Sarah Hubbell had also died, leaving her destitute, with a boy three years old to support. At the beginning of the present Winter the parents went to Bridgeport, and there lived for several months, in a very miserable manner, receiving now and then a small amount of money from their destitute daughters, who were at work in New-York. In February the parents received a letter from Lucetta asking them to come to New-York, and live with her and her sister at No. 13 Stanton-st. As they were almost starving in Bridgeport, this invitation was gladly accepted, and the entire family were soon again together in one home. A week after the arrival of her parents, Lucetta lost her situation in the shirtmaking factory, and for a fortnight could not obtain work. The family, as a consequence, were unable to pay their rent, and were driven out of the house by the Lucetta secured four rooms on the top floor of the fouretery building No. 46 Rivington-st., March 1, and there the family have since resided. About the time of the removal Lucetta obtained employment in the shirt-making shop of Jacob Levy at No. 22 Orchard-st. There, by work of the hardest kind, she could only earn between $3 and $4 a week. Soon after moving into the house in Rivington-et, her sister was thrown out of employment and deprived of this assistance she could not herself support the family. The family starved and the rent of the rooms could not be paid. Lucetta gave up two of the rooms, and the entire family of six persons have since lived in the other two rooms." That at least food might be earned during the past fortnight, Lucetta brought home with her from the shirt factory large quantities of material to be made up, and with her mother and sister worked long into the might carning money in this hard way.

On Thursday night to the great surprise and alarm of the family Luccita did not come home. Mr. Hubbeli went to the shirt factory of Mr. Levy, and there was in-formed that his daughter had been arrested. Returning home he did not tell his wife the sad news. Mrs. Hubbell could not sleep from anxiety, and remained awake. About I o'clock she was startled by hearing a loud knock at the door. Arising, she dressed herself, and opened the door. Outside were two men, who stepped into the room and said that they were detectives, and that they had come to search the room. They then told her, to her horror, that Lucetta had been arrested by the Brooklyn police, and was suspected of being concerned in the murder of Charles Goodrich. The detectives then proceeded to search the room. They opened Lucetta's trunk, examined its contents, looked into the cupbeards, on all the tables, and even turned over the playthings of the children in a basket. Everything in the room was thus subjected to an examination, but apparently the detectives found nothing to reward their search. A photograph of Lucetta was eagerly seized upon and examined, but was not taken away. The detectives, upon leaving the room, an reply to her anxious inquiries, told Mrs. Hubbell that her daughter would probably be released on the following day, and would then return home.

The apartments of the prisener's relatives were visited by a TRIBUNE reporter yesterday. The rooms were quite similar to the kitchen of a New-England farmer's house of the humbler type. A well-swept rag-carpet covered the floor, and plain deal chairs were scattered here and there. The center of the room was occupied by a small pine-wood table, at the moment concealed beneath the white expanse of a scrupulously clean table-cloth, itself dotted here and there with shining Chinaware. In one corner of the room was a cocking-stove brilliant with polish, upon the lids of which steamed and puffed a large

In regard to her daughter's private life, Mrs. Hubbell and that until the night before she had not known that Lucetta had any life beyond that visible to those at home. She believed that her daughter would not do wrong, and had not harmed Mr. Goodrich. She had heard her daughter speak two or three times of Mr. Goodrich long before the murder, and had supposed that the deceased was merely a friend whom Lucetta occausually met in going through the streets. On Saturday List her daughter was reading a newspaper, when she Goodrich has been shot." Her daughter said nothing more and soon went away to work. In the evening, as her daughter was sewing, she herself took up the paper and tend the account of the murder. After she had read the parrative through she turned to her daughter and " Lucetta, I think that a most absurd idea of the ...etectives that Goodrich committed suicide. No man, I think, could shoot himself through the head with a pistol three times in succession. Do you ?" Her daughter end not reply to this question, and the conversation

pron that subject was then abandoned. While the family lived in Stanton-at. Lucetta had often reserved visitors in a room used as a parlor, and the visthere were not known to the rest of the family. She, towever, was a good girl, and never to their knowledge and remained away from home a night. Mrs. Hubbell was very positive as to her daughter's always being at home at night, and said that it would have been impossible for Lucetta to remain away a night and the absource not be requested. She said that she could die | 11 a.m.

tinctly remember 'Lucetta's presence at home every night of last week. The family were very poor, and it was not possible for then to remain out of the alms-house if Lucetta was kept in prison. They already owed the landlerd $4 on nt, and they did not have any money to buy food with. Their landlord had threatened to turn them into the street the day before, and there was ne hope of their earning the money to pay him. Her daughter had told her that in the evening she occasionally went ever to Brooklyn for a walk; but on these evenings Lucetta was always at home by 10 o'clock. Leaving the family alone in their grief, the reporter went to the shirt factory of Jacob Levy, at No. 22 Or chard-st. It was there learned that Lucetta Myers obtained work by answering an advertisement published by Mr. Levy. When asked for her references she said, My face is my only reference." Her services were accepted and she proved to be a very industrious woman. She always worked hard and appeared to be cheerful. She took work home and always returned it promptly. She was never absent from the shop during er engagement, except upon Tuesday and Thursday of last week. On Friday morning she came in unusually early, a fact which was noticed by Miss Levy and a son of Mr. Levy. The prisoner excused her absence by saying that her mother and father had both been sick and that she had not been able to leave home. One of the women employed in the shop read aloud the account of the murder of Goodrich. Miss Levy remembered hearing Mrs. Myers say: "It is foolish to think that man could shoot himself; how could he shoot himself at the back of the head?" Mrs. Myers also said that she knew Goodrich, and that his relatives never knew he Brooklyn officers entered the factory at 5 o'clock The Brooklyn officers entered the factory at a occopy on Thursday afternoon of the present week and asked to see Mrs. Myers. The prisoner left her sewing-machine and went outside the door for a moment and talked with them. All then entered the room. One of the detectives took two photographs out of his pocket and asked Mrs. Myers if she could identify the persons represented in them. Mrs. Myers replied that one was pertrait of herself and the other of Mr. Goodrich. The officers then placed the prisoner in a carriage and took her to Brooklyn. her to Brooklyn.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST. ALL THE OLD FACTS REHEARSED-HOW THE BODY

WAS FOUND.

The Coroner's inquiry into the mysterious circumstances attending the murder of Charles Goodrich was begun at 2:30 p. m. yesterday, in the Court of Sessions-room, in the Kings County Court-house. There was a large number of persons present, including most of the public officials and many women. District-Attorney Britton and County Judge Henry A. Moore sat on the beach beside Coroner Whitehill. The testimony con toined scarcely anything that was new. The Coroner opened the case by calling the list of jurors, as follows William Richardson, Robert Spear, Daniel A. Robins, Daniel D. Whitney, Michael Bennett, Henry Fowler, William Robins, Owen Hazleton, Thomas Wild, and Fearly F. Laws.

Frank P. Gavin. James Rowan testified: I reside at No. 113 Thirdplace; I knew Charles Goodrich during his life; last saw him on Wednesday prior to his death, about 9 o'clock in the morning; I saw him in one of the houses on Degrawst.; I went there on business; I transacted my business and engaged to go there that afternoon or the next morning early, as he said he was going to New-York; I went there the next morning, but being unable to get in, went away, supposing that he had gone to New-York; I went there about 7 o'clock on Friday morning, rang the bell, and rapped on the door, but could elicit no answer; I was about to leave, when a man, whom I suppose was a plumber, came up; I said that Mr. Goodrich was away, and asked him to say that I would call again in the afternoon; I then went to New-York, and in Fultonst, learned that Mr. Goodrich had been shot; first went to those houses about Feb. 1, and was there between six and ten times in all I had frequently failed to see him, and supposed that he was not in from the fact that no one answered my knocks; I never saw a woman there who looked as hough she resided there, but have frequently seen ladies looking through the houses; never was told by Mr. Goodrich that he had had trouble with anybody; never had rich that he had had trouble with anybody; hever had any business transaction with Mr. Goodrich, as everything was pending at the time of his death; could not recognize any of the persons whom I have seen looking through the houses; I have been there as early as 7 o'clock when he was not up, but after making a little noise in an upper room he would come down and let me in; once about that time I found him up eating breakfast; I have not been there after night at any time; he was cating alone at the time; the last time I went there (Friday morning) I tried to look through the windows, but everything was so closely drawn that I could not do so; it did not strike me as being singular that the centrains were drawn down.

A story has gone the rounds of literary gossip about an attached pair, of names not unknown to fame, who went to board up-town, where people also went who were literary and of good taste. The lady, thinking that as she and her huseand were all in all to each other, it was as well they should remain so, desired of the hostess that there might be no introductions to of the hostess that there might be no introductions to the other boarders, which was observed. Various tender passages between the amiable pair on their way to and from the diming-room edified the family during the season. In time a Boston man came to board, and on his way to the basement at dinner, going down late, he heard a light laugh behind him, and a figure not so light as the laugh sprang on his shoulders and claimed a ride down stairs. The Boston man took things coolly, carried his burden down into the dining-room, and shot her into a vacant seat at the table. The lady looked up to find her husband already there kefore her, and every eye was lifted to watch these extraordinary proceedings. There was nothing to be done but to burst into tears, which she did.
